Mr. Logan moved that the House do not two Houses. concur. He opposed the rule limiting the Executor of Alfred Jones, deceased. Renumber of finance committee-making the ferred. Senate and House branches thereof of equal number. He held that it was wrong in principle, the House of Commons being clearly entitled to rule said committee from all legislative precedents hitherto recorded. Also the rule in reference to the joint committee on Magistrates. He held that this committee would take the appointment entirely out of the hands of the member. He had never heard of such a committee before.

Mr. Durham favored the joint rule. Mr. Latham of Washington did the same. Mr. Lyon opposed the rule in relation to Magistrates. He deemed it an innovation. He thought each members knew better whom to appoint for his county, than a committee of members from other counties. Mr. Davis favored concurrence in the report of the committee.

Mr. Lyon and Mr. Russ replied, opposing the rule in relation to a joint committee on Magistrates. Mr. Freeman favored the appointment of rule to be in the way of that necessary ob-

Mr. Blair desired to know how the members of the proposed committee could tell who was competent to be a Magistrate, and who not. How could a member from the East tell who ought to be Magistrate in Randolph ? He was there to represent his County and to recommend Magistrates. He denied the right of others to do this latter part of his duty for him.

The yeas and nays being called for, the House refused to concur in the report as fol-

For the Standard. TO UNION MEN FROM AN UNIONIST.

Deluded Voters --- Representation --- All the offices --- Blessing Brethren --- Congratulations in Congress .-- Southern Leaders ... Loval Thunder, &c., &c.

There is now and has been all the time, an ntelligent, respectable and highly moral class of citizens, in all the insurgent States, segregate themselves from the benign gov-who do not desire, and never did desire, to ernment of their fathers. These are the persons to whom we would address a few remarks; these are they who have been so grievously abused for their opinions sake, during the rebellion, for four calamitous years. These are they now, who are deprived of all part in the governments of the so-styed Southern States. Who are Granville, Jones, Jordan, Latham, of Craven, frowned upon at the White House, and who are not at all regarded at the Capitol. These persons have proved, it appears, too honest, too courageous, and but too true prophets to suit the caprices of the tyrant-trodden peoole of the South. The deluded Southern people seem to prefer prevarication with flattery so soothing to their vain imaginings, to unflattered truth with stern facts and stub orn realities. They want no foretelling of impending doom, no logic of unalterable lestiny to be indexed upon their better judgments in that unglossed truth which in the giveness, solely, and very properly, only to end must prevail without leaving any flowery that small class of politicians at the South joint committee on Magistrates, which was plains for imagination to play. These poor who were the actual, official and recognised power-forsaken people, for whom we almost promoters of the late rebellion. feel fit to exclaim, as Rudolph did of old, "pious brethren give us your curses hereafter, your blessings roost on the wrong perch!"

For Heaven's blessings at the answer of some Heaven's b of these "blessings brethren," judging by their past efficacy would at this untoward time, be irretrievable destruction. The condition of this class of our population, the general government-the law-making and the law-executing powers-knows them well enough to be the only fire-furnaced tried adherents of the Union of all the States. Both these departments know this well enough. Whether they choose to act on the information is another question. And these are the portion of the people, that the bickerings of the two independent branches irreparably injure, so long as at the present public affairs continue. How long shall the patience of these altogether innocent people be abused? Where would our groaning land be? what the difference be now and the late Confederate times? if their waning patience should at last become exhausted? When shall the last straw be laid on their unoffending backs? Their fate is hard, but let us ask those who have already endured so much, to endure yet a little more; and yet a little longer to abide their time. Matters now must be at their worst, the fates can not possibly hold in store for them but little more tribulation. Something we know not what, it can not be worse, must ere long be done.-And the truth then will be asserted, and justice fully sustained. The Congress meets in a short while. The elections for the present are all decided and proved decisive. The voters of seventeen loyal States have told Congress, in tones of thunder, loud enough for all to hear, by more than four hundred thousand majority, that the Union of 1860.

shall be constructed and that construction perfected in terms and mode prescribed by themselves. A few score of the political leaders of the South during the rebellion, and who as they took the lead then, now take the roadway and still presume to act as old stagers of the team, and "bully leaders" they are, "in a baulk," all other cattle must be harnessed to follow their guidance, wherever or whenever they choose to give the only true and proper direction. But have not these "old hacks" had a fair and double trial in two Congresses, at Washington and at Richmond, the two great capitals of the late United-States and Confederate States of America? And what has been the result?-The world sees it. And the world condemns it. If there are any statesmen left in the land, and who can donbt it? The burthens now most weighty on innocent and unoffending citizens, these statesmen will soon remove We tell them that anything is better than uncertainty. The whole country demands reconstruction at their hands. Two years, and there is yet no peace. The men who saved the country in extremis, can certainly cure it after the throes of its paroxysm are past Let them apply "one leech" to the suppurating flesh of the body politic, and if this one will not draw, then "that other leech," the "good bloodsucker" that will remove all putridity, and pour some salubri-ons ointment on, and bind up with healing salve, the still gaping sores of the diseased country. But where are the once vaunted statesmen of the South? Where are the races of Mangum's, Gastons' and Badgers of North-Carolina? These were all honorable men, they loved their country more than office however so exalted the station. YE GoDs! is there now no honor left among our public men? except that "honor" that is found con-all the "honor" that our public men shall hereafter seek? And shall our poor deluded eople put honor and trust again in the clutching fists of such men? Heaven forbid it. Men who have been tried and trusted with everything and who finally preserved nothing, save their inordinate thirst and craving appetites, like poor little Oliver beseech ing the people "to give them more." Are these the men who have fed fat all their lives, and who are still to be "compelled" to swallow all the gravy of all fleshpots? Cato the Censor, as well as King Solomon, said beware of a fool! But in these there is unity of knavery with folly, and ye hug them Mr. Rogers a bill to prevent molestation of the closer to your bosoms. You talk about horses or mules captured by soldiers of either guarantees from Congress before the adoption of constitutional amendments. And in the people, with unguaranteed and untiring confidence. The self-same men who destroyed the whole land once, and who would coolly say now, as they have exclaimed be-fore, we never intended it! They always supposed the States had a constitutional right to secede, and under chartered rolls of record, to set up new governments whenever they desired! They never intended war, they were ever for peaceable proceedings.— There could be no war. No body is going to fight the United South. They never can Nov. 24, 1866. be whipped-look at our boys in gray, any A LARGE LOT OF FINE APPLES, ALSO one of them is equal to at the least, sixteen Yankees. "They never can whip us!" even if there should bea "little brush!" we will agree to drink up every drop of blood or wipe it all up with one bandanna!" Now AT ye North-Carolina parliamentarians sent here to represent the honest people of the State, not the "knaves or fools," but the plain, unpolitical common sense farmers-send to the federal Congress once more, any them yet once again, as old Harry advised the farmer of Kentucky to try him, your brag men, and your cling men, who will boast of their prowess over the North, and cling so securely and so surely to the good government of their fathers. What a treat it would be to hear them descant on oaths and love of country. the whole country, the utter detestation they have always entertained for office! What a margin for forensic display. It would be rich to see Trumbull wink, and old Horace smile and Morrissey stand ready to back 'em with his broad fists and well-filled bottle to moisten their ardent chops. With what unction would Gen. Butler shake them by the hand, and placidly enquire if they had any more spoons left in "sunny Southland," that he had seen good many on his last trip Ah! how mellifluous would flow their won drous kind words, teeming with unfettered patriotism. Order them immediately into their respective seats, the Congress can not get on without them, and if any of these honorable men should unite with their great love of country, the additional experience of having been at Richmond where they could go or vote anything without letting their constituencies into the secret, in holy conclave with all doors closed, they would have the huge advantage of knowing something, the others did not understand, and like "lapping" an ace from the pack they would be sure to win, as they have heretofore done on every deal. In the districts the same sort of men should be returned or as near like as "Bill and Tom specially Bill!" to fill the gaping seats, and you may be assured of two good things, to say the least, your representatives will excel all others in capaciousness of Esophagi, and spunginess of kerchiefs and both always ready for the people's service. And one other thing the signs give token that the men of the North, who sustained the government, in her recent great travail, can and will devise some scheme, now that they understand the whole situation, to place justice and peace and mercy and Union once more triumphant, wherever that old banner of Washington, of Hancock, of Hamilton should be unfurled. And that the Congress with full concurrence of the Executive in that scheme, will in a short while, grant to the misguided disunion people of the insurgent States, a qualified amnesty, for their forced and of course involuntary part in the rebellion restricting the disability of for-

A PLEASANT PARTY. - A pleasant party assembled in the dining-rooms at Mrs. Watson's yes-terday afternoon. We believe the bar, the press, the pulpit, and both Houses of the General Assembly had representatives at the table, and we are informed discussed the good things, provided in such abundance, with a royal good will. An old epicure and Commoner, on whose opinion we place very high estimate, whether the debateable point is a matter of public policy, appetite or drinketite, assures us that the lady of the feast demonstrated her great capacity as a house
